Stability, Coordination Is Sought

WASHINGTON - The U.S. Treasury secretary, James A. Baker 3d, on Wednesday proposed that the major industrialized nationsreinforce their pact to stabilize cur-rencies by evaluating exchange rates against a basket of commodities, including gold.

The aim would be to guarantee that currency arrangements were backed up by policies, that would ensure that inflation in the industrial world remained low.

The announcement, at the Inter-national Monetary Fund and World Bank annual meeting, repre-sented the first U.S. bid to bring gold back into the world system for determining exchange rates since President Nixon ended the dollar's nevertibility into gold in 1971. Mr. Baker praised recent efforts by the world's seven major industrial democracies to coordinate teps in an effort 10 help stabilize the dollar.

"It is equally important that the policies resulting from the coordination process not be inflationary," Mr. Baker told representatives of 151 nations "It would be unfortunate if our efforts to foster exchange rate stability among correncies led to stable currency relationships - but in a context of inflationary economic policies that reduced the real value of all currencies," Mr. Baker said. His proposal was designed to be a refinement of a process endorsed by leaders of the seven industrial nations — the United States, Japan, West Germany, France, Britain, Canada and Italy — at last Jane's economic summit in Venice.

The process called for increased surveillance of one another's economies through the use of economic indicators such as unemployment, trade balances, and growth.

The use of these indicators were to help policy makers fine-time decisions that affect exchange rates - such as interest rates of central banks and direct government inter-vention on foreign exchange mar-

The agreement at the Venice summit followed the so-called Louvre accord on currency-stabilizaed in Paris in Februar by all seven leading nations except Italy, which boycotted the meeting because it and Canada were not consulted at an earlier stage.

Mr. Baker told the world financial leaders that more attention needs to be given to potential price surges.

"Accordingly, the United States is prepared to consider utilizing, as an additional indicator in the coordination process, the relationship among our currencies and a basket of commodities, including gold. This could be helpful as an earlywarning signal of potential price trends," he said.

He did not specify what other com-modities would be included in the proposal. Investors worried about inflation often buy gold as a hedge against the declining value of paper currencies, pushing the netal's price higher. The decision

NOUMEA, New Caledonia (Reuters) - Two French gendarmes were shot to death Wednesday while searching a Kanak village in France's Pacific territory of New Caledonia. Ethnic tensions have been running high on the island, but officials in Paris and police here said the killings appeared to be criminally rather than politically motivated. About 300 police supported hy helicopters were searching for the attackers through heavily wooded mountains in northwestern New Caledonia, they added.

France has deployed 8,400 soldiers and police in New Caledonia to keep the peace between indigenous Kanaks seeking independence from France and pro-French settlers, mostly ethnic Europeans. The separatist leader, Jean-Marie Tjiabaou, said Wednesday that violent incidents were bound to occur because of the heavy military presence of the French.

U.S. Pressing Ahead on Saudi Arms Sale

By Don Oberdorier

Washington Past Service
WASHINGTON — The State Department has strongly suggested that the administration is planning to go ahead with a large-scale arms ale to Saudi Arabia despite the pposition of 64 senators. Administration officials said that a final decision on what arms would be sold was likely to be made

A State Department spokeswoman, Phyllis Oakley, said Tuesday that the $1.4 billion arms sale under consideration would be in the U.S. interest.

She said it was "unfortunate" the sale was being opposed on Capitol Hill "when the Saudis are providing critical support to U.S. naval operations in the Gulf in ways which meet our mutual interests and needs, and in ways which many in Congress have long urged."

Mrs. Oakley declined to make

Beauty is just one of the beauties of a BMW.

Beauty brings its own rewards. This time round, it's called the "Car Design Award". An accolade jealously presented just once a year. And in 1987, that was to the BMW 7 Series design team.

What impressed the jury most were the pure aesthetics of the functional design and the way they so successfully married uncompromising technology with unblemished beauty.

And, in that respect, it's worth remembering something that's more true today than ever before: any car manufacturer who these days regards design as an end in itself, immediately puts himself in a technology straitiacket. Truly great design always possesses one invisible ingredient: function.

That principle was written into the BMW philosophy from the very beginning. So when BMW engineers and designers are developing a new car, they always have concrete objectives in their minds. The way they achieve these frequently tough and conflicting aims is a creative process where only the perfect combination of drag coefficiency, comfort and personality has a place. The outward appearance of a BMW, therefore, will never be the result of a compromise, but much more frequently of a completely new design route.

But for BMW functional aesthetics are never confined just to the outside. Even the engines, from the very first development stage, are cocreated by the design team. And perhaps that's why so many BMW drivers have this beguiling habit of now and again looking presidential primaries, Democratic and Republican hopefuls are making a mess of foreign policy. Republicans are for the most part playing to deep suspicion about arms control agreements with the Soviet Union. Democrats, with exceptions, tend to rail against new weapons systems and condemn the use of force to back up diplomacy. It will oot be easy for the oext president to reclaim a middle ground laid waste by the battle.

The primaries drive Republicans to the right and Democrats in the left, and nowhere with higher cost than on foreign policy issues. The victors often transform their oratory into commitments. Even when they want in escape their words, they often find themselves trapped.

Pierre du Pont, Alexander Haig, Jack' Kemp and Pat Robertson make clear their displeasure with the prospective treaty to eliminate medium and shorter-range mis-siles from Europe and Asia. Bob Dole reserves his judgment until the treaty is completed, although he makes negative noises about deals with Moscow, Only Vice President George Bush supports the treaty.

Do opponents of the treaty actually believe that the agreement would damage U.S. security? The treaty would call on Moscow to destroy four times as many missiles as Washington. Aside from removing the threat of SS-20 missiles - which conservatreaty would change little in the military balance. And if anyone needs political cover, the last seven secretaries of defense have pronounced themselves in favor of the pact. If these Republicans cannot support this treaty, it is hard to know what treaty they could, if elected, bring themselves to make.

The Democratic hopefuls endorse the prospective treaty wholeheartedly. But they give the impression that they would buy almost any arms accord and would oppose any new strategic nuclear weapon, Alone among his rivals, Albert Gore favors the MX and Midgetman missiles. Both could be made mobile and thus relatively invulnerable, and the Midgetman is essentially a retaliatory weapon. Michael Dukakis, meanwhile, urges canceling the D-5 submarine-launched missile, an important addition to the U.S. arsenal.

Mr. Dukakis, Jesse Jackson, Paul Simon and Richard Gephardt at teast impty that the United States has no military role in play in the Gulf region. Why simplify reality in such an extreme? Only Mr. Gore, and Bruce Babhitt to some degree, speak as though they understand the relation of force and diplomacy. It is too bad that the candidates seem resigned in these campaign caricatures. More reasoned positions would dignify their ambitions.

The Role for the Contras

Five years of U.S. support for the contras as a military force failed in gain them a political role in Nicaragua, but now U.S. diplomats are trying to use the Arias peace plan to the same end. It is the right end, and deserves broad Latin support, even though the going in Managua is uphill.

The terms of the peace plan, written by the region's governments, are stacked against guerrillas challenging those govern-ments. The plan ensures a political break only to "unarmed internal political opposition groups." In Nicaragua, those groups tend in be brave but divided and undermanned. The armed Nicaraguan resistance is another story. It includes elements of the country's discredited Somoza past, but also substantial democratic, middle-class and peasant elements, which could become vigorous in open political competition. The peace plan requires the Sandinists to offer them only individual amnesty, not space for a corporate political role. This is what American diplomacy now seeks in change.

The entering wedge is the issue of a ceasefire. The United States urges the Sandinists in pegotiate the matter directly with the contra leadership. The carrot for the Sandinists is the promise of a more orderly and reliable cease-fire. But, as everyone in the region understands, such a procedure would amount to a first stage of Sandinist political recognition of the resistance. Managua resists, and counters with an offer to arrange local cease-fires with contra field commanders. That might meet minimal standards of a strict reading of the Central America peace plan. Still, a broad and, we would argue, true reading requires regional governments to take good-faith steps to bring about genuine political reconcilia-tion. Obviously this is better done when a government negotiates with its major opposition — always assuming that the opposi-tion plays by fair political rules.

El Salvador's elected president, although be is not absolutely required by the peace plan in do so, is trying in work out a ceasefire with the leftist guerrilla front struggling against his government. He is making this test of guerrilla good faith in order to exploit the full potential of Central America's current reach for peace. If José Napoleón Duarte can act in this bold and statesmanlike way, why can't Daniel Ortega, too?

well known figure and the center of controversy in Europe. She is not a rock star or a world-class athlete, but a self-confessed murderer. According to Newsweek magazine, Paula Cooper, who celebrated her 18th birthday in the Indiana Women's Prison last month, has become the focus of the ly, France, Spain and West Germany.

Miss Cooper is hardly a heroine. When she was 15 years old, she and three friends hustled their way into the home of Ruth Pelke, a 78-year-old Bible studies teacher, and robbed and killed her. Paula Cooper confessed to stabbing the victim 33 times. People in Indiana who remember that vicious crime bristle when millions in Europe sign petitions demanding a pardon and when others refer to the teen-ager as the real victim in this case. But while few Americans would agree with this characterization. many share the Europeans' abhorrence of capital punishment for teen-agers.

Since the death penalty was reinstated in the United States in 1976, dozens of young people have been sentenced to death for crimes committed before they were 18. Some of them have already been executed.

An American teen-ager has become a Only six of the 35 states that have capital punishment prohibit its use as a penalty for crimes committed by minors. A handful of others require that age be taken into consideration at the time of sentencing, but in most jurisdictions this critical fact is not thought to be particularly important.

None of the democratic countries of so it is easy to understand wby people in those countries find the practice of executing teen-agers particularly repellent. You may believe that American laws are not their business, or you may suspect that many of Paula Cooper's supporters are generally anti-American in a number of areas. But the point being made is nevertheless valid. No civilized society sets the same standards for children as for adults.

Youngsters can do terrible things - as Paula Cooper did - but they are not generally penalized as severely as mature persons who break the law. Even those who do not share our view that capital punishment is always wrong should be horrifted by the prospect of using it in the case of someone not considered mature enough to sign a contract, drive a car or vote.

Imports Are a Good Sign

Our local supermarket in Washington is awash with English jams, Danish cheeses. New Zealand lamb and Polish ham. French. ttalian. This overflowing cornucopia of foreign products is a far cry from the days when only the rich could afford in buy imported goods.

To my way of thinking, it is also a vast improvement. Not only do consumers have a larger variety of choice than ever before, but ition often contributes to lewer prices and higher quality. Minority Rule for Fiji?

With two coups in the space of five months, Fiji is beginning in resemble a ba-nana republic in a Gilbert and Sullivan operetta. Except that coup leader Sitiveni Rabuka is not getting good reviews. Britain and other foreign powers will not recognize Lieutenant Colonel Rabuka's forceful attempts to establish a republic. There is talk of stopping aid and imposing economic sanctions. Fiji's two main money earners, tourism and sugarcane, have been affected. Tourists do not like political uncertainty and Indian workers are not bringing in the cane. Governor General Sir Penaia Ganilan. whose authority Colonel Rabuka claims he launched the coup to protect, has refused in recognize him as the country's leader. Which leaves the colonel looking quite foolish when he persists in talking about democracy and eventual return to civilian rule — democracy at the point of a gun, and with plans for a revised constitution that will insist on power remaining in the hands of indigenous Fijians. However you phrase it, that's minority rule. - The New Straits Times (Kuala Lumpur).

Another Man Gone, but the People Stay

WASHINGTON — Before we finally say bye-bye to Joe Biden, we ought to give the guy balf a break. At least be knew when to quit, and he reminded us that petty betrayals and mindless neglect sometimes have deplorable results. The same goes for Gary Hart and Oliver North, John Poindexter and Ivan Boesky and the Bakkers. We are living in an age of pretense when even faking sincerity is the style, and it's reassuring in know that it doesn't always work. Senator Biden isn't a bad man, like so many in the political dodge, just a breezy, gabby, careless man, full of good looks and good intentions, unsupported by clear thinking or plain speaking. There are plenty more like him still in town. The good news is that the pretenders are now getting caught oftener than before - not many of them, but enough to make the others canny. In a way, while modern technology expands the reach of lies, it also comes to the rescue of truth. Not so long ago, candidates for the presidency could tell the voters one thing in one part of the country and the opposite in another and get away with it. But reporters have tape recorders now, and there are television cameras even at county fairs, and the voters can catch the lies on their VCRs. Still, we have some problems. There are, for example, the political ventriloquists. They don't merely steal other politicians' cute tricks or paraphrase Stevenson's "Home Book of Quotations." but deliver the best speeches money can buy written by well paid hidden persuaders. Joe wasn't so smart or so lucky. He wrote his own fairy tales and always looked slicker than he was, with his twisted smile and his hey-fella-how m-Idoin' pose. He was a picture: Even his flashing white teeth, which looked false, are real.

The ventriloquists are a greater danger, for they have behind them a company of political strategists, speech writers, gag writers and make-up artists who are unrestrained, unelected and usually unavailable. And they have TelePromp-Ters, those bittle black boxes under the podium telling them on invisible screens what to say and even when in smile or point a finger for emphasis. To the viewer down in the audience or the voter watching the boob tube, it all seems so reasonable, so well spoken and so easy, as if the great man just thought it all up. Ronald Reagan, of course, is the unmatched practitioner of this art, the greatest pretender of them all. Before America really gets into the 1988 cam-paign, however, we could use an early warning system. America sorely needs an election this ne and not another vaudeville show. It needs in know far more about where these guys come from about their early lives and associations and about what serious reading they do, if any, and what they really know about the problems and continents they toss around so glibly. And we need to know it before they are nominated.

Then there is the problem of the people, for no ditician can be worse than the voters who elect him. It is popular in political campaigns to criticize everybody but the people, and no newspaper ever picked up much circulation by doing so. But "we the people," who have been so glorified at the Constitution's birthday party, usually don't listen, and about half of the eligibles don't vote.

The problem isn't new. Thomas Carlyle, ex-ing the ourrages of the French Revolution, did not blame the big shots alone but everybody who had avoided his duty as a citizen — every man, from "shoe black to Sovereign Lord."

The tragedy of Germany in our own time was blamed on the Nazis and not on the people who backed them. And in the United States the Irancontra scandals were blamed on the president's easygoing habits, although the people had every opportunity to know that this was his way of doing things, or not doing them, before they put him in the White House not once but twice.

Will they change next time round the merry-go-round? Will they look for somebody who will tell them the truth instead of what they want to hear?
Probably not unless they realize that the selection of the president in 1988 is undoubtedly the most important political question in the world, and that the outcome is their personal responsibility.

United Nations: Hammarskjöld, Thant, Waldheim N EW YORK — When Dag Ham-marskjöld of Sweden was elected

He doggedly oursued efforts to find a way to end it long after the resentment of President Lyndon Johnson and Secretary of State Dean Rusk was publicly evident and they had rejected his propos-al for talks in Rangoon which North Vietnam had already accepted. Ironically. U Than's line of approach to ending the Vietnam War was taken up with ultimate success, four years and hundreds of thousands of casualties later, by Henry Kissinger.

Kurt Waldheim, it has now become clear, lied for nearly 40 years about his war record, presumably be-some cases sacrificed, their lives for it. The Waldheim episode is above all an indictment of the way in which governments, and especially the great powers, select the world's leading international civil servant.

Although good men have been elected, looking for the person with the qualities best suited to this infinitely demanding and important job seems to hold a very low priority for governments. Rather, political differences dictate a search for a candidate who will not exert any troubling degree of lead-ership, commitment, originality or in-energetic, ambitious mediocrity.

In fact he did rather better as secretary-general than I had anticipated and demonstrated determination and even, on occasion, courage. But be lacked the qualities of vision, integrity, inspiration and leadership that the United Nations so desperately needs. He was conscientious, hard-working, and had great physical stamma. Working with Mr. Waldheim could be a grind because be insisted on going over and over the smallest degoing over and over the similar te-tails, often going right back to the beginning and starting all over again, so that meetings and conversations frequently dragged on for hours and late into the night.

He worried a great deal about his public image, but his efforts to tackle this problem usually made things worse. His manner sometimes seemed ingratiating, and he tried too hard with too little in say. All in all, he had an unfortunate public personality.

This comment has been excerpted by the International Herald Tribune from Mr. Urquhart's new book "A Life in War and Peace."

United Nations: And Now a Revival?

HELSINKS - Suddenly the --- By Max Jakobson United Nations is back in business. After more than a decade in the doldrums, the Security Council is again the scene of high drama. The foreign ministers of the Big Five have been personally negotiating resolu-tions designed to pacify the Gulf. Nothing quite like this has ever happened before. Nor is there any ect precedent for the peacemaking mission undertaken by the secretar general in the Iran-Iraq war.

The short-term tactical calculations that have prompted this activity are obvious. The two superpowers are on course toward a sum and nothing must be allowed to come in their way. A serious incident in the Gulf region could easily get out of control. So the U.S. and Soviet governments have rediscovered the usefulness of the United Nations. The organization provides a cover of legitimacy for collaboration — or collusion - between "the evil empire" and "the aggressive Reagan regime." There is, however, a deeper signifi-cance in this. It seems the leaders of the two powers have finally realized that, while each has the capacity to destroy the world, neither is able uni-laterally in control it. The Soviets minded. its knees has proved to be an illusion. A kind of creeping pragmatism is spreading to the Third World. Jolted the American withdrawal from UNESCO, the developing countries are finally recognizing the need to clean up the administration and finances of the United Nations The prospect of a revival has pro-duced auguished cries from those Americans who passionately believe that the organization is not only useless as an instrument of policy but morally corrupt. Nevertheless, the United Nations is unlikely to sink. But it is equally unlikely that the fresh proposals for a reform of UN structures and procedures recently put forward by a distinguished interna-tional panel under the auspices of the UN Association of the United States can be carried out in the forseeable future. The reformers vastly overrate the rationality of governments. Experience has shown that member states are incapable of agrecing on construc-tive action in anticipation of future crises. They react to events.

Experience also shows that it is the lack of political will, rather than any structural shortcomings, that prevents the leading powers from using the United Nations for peacemaking and peacekeeping. Once the will is there, the organization is made in work, in spite of its obvious weaknesses. The important thing is not what could be done to fine-tune the UN machinery, but rather how to ensure the quality of leadership. The genera-tion of selfless international civil servants of the Hammarskjöld school has left. On Politics, Min Has a Point

By Jim Hoagland

DARIS - My friend the Frenchman had one of those Eurocomplaints that he had to get off his chest and onto America's back. "Here I am a leading Americanologist," he remarked accurately enough back in the spring, "and I don't know a single one of these Democratic candidates. They don't come to Europe like the older generation did. We don't know anything about them."
That's all right, I responded.

"Neither do we."

That is a hard notion for most Europeans to handle, despite the swift ends of the campaigns of Gary Hart and Joe Biden under the pressure of media exposure. It is a great cultural divide: Americans roll the dice with politicians in a way Europeans profess to find inexplicable and dangerous. Europeans natter on in ways Americans find stodgy and condescending.

The truth is that America and Europe have political systems that are weird in different ways. In France, for example, politics, sex and rhetoric are all taken too seriously in be the cause of scandal or the kind of national kneeslapping and finger-pointing that wrote finis to the Hart and Biden campaigns. As Mr. Biden was being blown out of the water by remote-controlled videotape, a rightwing French presi-dential contender named Jean-Marie Le Pen was getting on front pages by suggesting that the existence of Nazi gas chambers was only "a detail" of gas chambers was only "a detail or World War II history. A major brouhaha ensued — for all of two days. The professionals thought the remark might burt him a little, but one poll now shows that it has cost him no support. He is still running hard, while Mr. Biden is history.

Like every other French politician who stands any chance of being elect-ed president next May, Mr. Le Pen is a known quantity to all of France's voters. His gaffe was in voicing in open terms the covert but clear racist sentiment that won him his following in the first place. Nobedy stopped to ask, as they did in the case of Mr. Hart and Mr. Biden, "Who is this guy anyway? Does he know who be is?"

Mr. Le Pen has built his constituency in 20 years of national exposure. It would not evaporate overnight because of a weekend fling or discovery that his law school record is not what he says it is. The same is true for the other French presidential candidates. Their faults and weaknesses are by and large known, and accepted, by an electorate that has watched them closely at a national level for years. It is my impression, in fact, that a majority of French voters would agree that the four leading contenders in the gathering presidential race — that is, François Mitterrand, Michel Rocard, Raymond Barre and Jacques Chirac

-are all qualified to be president. They definitely disagree on which one is best qualified, and they may think that the candidates they do not support have terrible flaws. But voters in Europe do not seem to harbor the kind of doubts and questions about their candidates' mental abilities and emotional stability that afflict Americans today during primary season. Candidates have reached the top by slogging through constituency systems that emphasize local ties, putting them on display over years to progressively widening circles of "neighbors" who decide whether their qualities ournumber the failings they may exhibit.
Personalities and positions are thus well known by the time the relatively brief formal campaign rolls around Despite the widespread impression to the contrary, European politicians are engaged in permanent national political campaigning much more than are their American counterparts.

Movement during the campaign itself tends to be incremental, based on how well the candidates run their campaigns and address their already known positions. Questioners have to have mastered the details of the economy. arms control or other topics to push the debate, and the story, forward,

Such campaigns are unexciting when judged by the U.S. standards of dramatic disclosure or sudden shifts in the polls. Check recent stories about European elections and see how often they are portrayed as boring or excru-ciatingly predictable. But also reflect on the proposition that the reasonably attentive reader of The Washington Post or The New York Times was probably exposed to more coverage this year about Neil Kinnock's views on arms control than about Gary Hart's or Joe Biden's. Or consider that George Bush's dramatic meeting with Lech Walesa in Warsaw on Monday received more coverage on French television than it did on CBS Evening News. For all the stodginess and insufferable condescension, on politics Europe has a point. The Washington Post.

1937: Italy Joins Patrol PARIS - The agreement which permits fally to participate in the "policing of the Mediterranean against piracy" on a basis of equality with France and Great Britain was signed at the French Ministry of the Navy [on Sept. 30] by French, British and Italian naval experts. The agreement has now been submitted to the three governments for ratification. Although described as being a technical arrangement to put an end to "piratical" attempts, the agreement is believed to be a first approach toward the definition of the respective zones of supervision in the Mediterranean of Italy, France and Great Britain. Its conclusion was made possible by concessions on the part of France and Great Britain to ftaly's demand for exclusive patrol of the corridor between Sicily and Tripoli and most of the Eastern Mediterranean.

Some Reasons Not to Cheer For the Missile Agreement

By George F. Will

WASHINGTON — The search for inexorable. Pershing and cruise missiles, immobilized by Europe's historical W good reasons for rejoicing about the U.S.-Soviet agreement on intermediate-range nuclear forces is like the 19th century search for the source of the Nile: difficult. It is, however, unlike that 19th century search because explorers knew the Nile had to have a source.

The agreement will retire fewer than 4 percent of the worldwide inventory of warheads. The retirements are concentraied in Europe and will magnify the importance of the enormous Soviet advantage in conventional forces there.

It is preposterous to say that domestic engencies drove the Soviet leadership in this direction. It did not seek this agreement to achieve economic respite. The egreement will have no measurable effect on either side's defense spending.

The agreement removes from Europe the weapons the Soviets fear most, the Pershing-2s. These missiles can penethe Pershing-2s. These missiles can pene-trate the Soviet Union with certainty and can strike targets accurately in 13 min-ures. The Soviets will dismantle no weapons that could strike the United States. All the American weapons that will be dismantled could strike Soviet territory. Some defenders of the agreement say that the weapons to be scrapped were 100 vulnerable 10 be valuable.

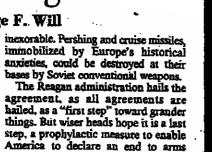

These defenders have a point. There are two ways to reduce the volnerability of weapons - armor or mobility. Missiles are "soft" weapons; a bullet can pierce them. The Pershing and cruise missiles were supposed to be quickly dispersible during crises. But host countries have put unreasonable restraints on the movements of the weapons (which, because of Pentagon maladministration, have cumbersome logistical accessories). In a crisis, American requests to host countries to disperse the missiles probably would be ected as provocative. Restraints on the movements of the weapons reflect Europe's haunted memory. The specter in America's historical memory is Pearl Harbor, a lightning strike. Europe's obsession is, under-standably, the First World War, which began with mobilizations that became

Enough to Start a Last Meal

F YOU think Doomsday ought to be delivered in 30 minutes rather than in sir, the proposed missile treaty is a major advance. The Soviets 1,320 warheads and America's 316 that would be unstrewed are on medium- and short-range siles that need only six minutes' flying time. The treaty does not cover long-range missiles 30 minutes away from the kill zones. With 24 extra minutes — time enough for a last meal, or at least the first course — humanity can thank Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev for bringing annihilation to us less harriedly.

control in Europe. They hope it will anesthetize Europe's peace movement and America's arms control clerisy. It is supposed to be arms control to end arms control, It is supposed to ease the pressure on Western parliamentarians who are under constant pressure to cut defense budgets in order to enrich welfare state benefits. But arms control agreements whet the thirsts they are supposed to slake. The current agreement will energize the forces pushing for the denuclearization of Europe. President Reagan's recent rhetoric has contributed to the natization of nuclear weapons. The agreement will require the Soviets to destroy many more warheads than the United States. But that asymmetry is a small price for the Soviets to pay for the ment enhancement of convention al forces. To enhance European stability now would require Soviet consent to another asymmetrical reduction, this time of conventional forces. The military historian John Keegan says the agreement may recover for the Soviet Union much that it lost in Europe through two postwar blunders. In 1945, the Soviet Union withdrew from Yugoslavia, thereby forfeiting access to the Mediterranean. After the 1956 Austrian treaty, it withdrew forces from Hungary, thereby igniting the revolt that cost communism its ideological clan. But the constant Soviet aim - military dominance of the Continent - requires neither Mediterranean access nor ideological élan.

Soviet military dominance is advanced by agreements that reduce nuclear forces without reducing conventional forces. The new agreement rests on the fallacy that any subtraction from nuclear inventories makes the world safer.

The Soviet approach to arms control has nothing to do with "control" as the Western public understands it, nothing to do with reducing the importance of weapons in relations between nations. Moscow uses arms control to impede the West's procurements and deployments, to chan-nel arms competition in directions disad-vantageous to the West, and to produce a climate conducive to theft and subsidized purchase of Western technology.

The closest one can come to a good reason for accepting the accord is this: Arms agreements are inevitable. Democracies demand them. This is minimalist arms control; it is, strictly speaking; the least we can do. Perhaps the recrudescence of detente can be minimized.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Congress and the Gulf

In response to the report "Elite, Secret Army Unit Attacked Iran Ship" (Sept. 24) by George C. Wilson:

Once a U.S. force was committed in the Gulf for the futile purpose of at-tempting to protect Kuwain tankers (carrying oil the United States doesn't need), it was only a matter of time before escalation took place. Now it has, and the United States is responsible. It remains to be seen where and when Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini will strike back. Once he has, the United States will have to decide whether to back down after huge and unnecessary loss of life (as it did in Beirut), or to take the next step and, for instance, bomb Iranian military positions. By then, Americans everywhere will have become targets for Iranian-backed terrorists.

U.S. forces have been in an area of hostilities since July. When will Congress force the Reagan administration to obey the law, invoke the War Powers Act and put an end to this dangerous nonsense? JACK NORSTROM Saanen, Switzerland,

Death for Drug Traffickers

Regarding "Malaysia's Death Penal-ty" (Letters, Sept. 22):

Patrick Hustead, in condemning Malaysia's death penalty for drug traffickers, speaks like a flower child of the ers, speaks like a flower child of the 1960s. He would approve "reasonable about South Africa's labeling of apart-sanctions" for sellers of drugs. He is outraged, however, by Malaysia's "tragic and pointless slaughter" of traffickers. I disagree, Malaysia should be applauded and cited as a courageous world leader in the fight against drugs.

The real tragedy is not of the traffickers deservedly hanged; it is of the countless thousands of Malaysians (and others) addicted to debilitating chemicals.
"Travelers should voice their disgust by refusing to visit such countries." Mr.

Hustead says. Malaysians, and we Westerners in Malaysia, welcome business people and tourists to this lovely country. If, however, you seek a market with "reasonable sanctions" to peddle drugs, our advice is to go elsewhere. N. LEE POLHILL

Trimmed Down Titles

I was outraged to read Steven Spurrier's attack on American journalists (Letters, June 15). Proper usage would frown on the order "Lord Alfred Doug-las." The traditional long form, "Alfred, Lord Douglas," was quite correctly re-duced to "Lord Douglas" in William Safire's article of May 18.

gola and Mozambique. As long as those countries are outposts of Soviet totalitarianism, it seems natural that white South Africans should fear Soviet expansionism (for why else would the Soviets be there?) and tend to identify the entire African National Congress with its numerous Communist members. If, however, Angola and Mozam-bique had freely elected, nonaligned governments, this fear would become groundless and the door would be open

Commodities on the Rise

Nicholas D. Kristof's report "Commodities Upturn Baffles Experts" (Business/Finance, Sept. 16), was timely and well informed, but it overlooked the role of the changing strength of the dollar. The commodity depression of the 1980s has no single cause, but it certainly coincided with a very strong dollar. Now that the dollar has weakened, some people are evidently finding an upward drift in commodity prices "inexplicable," Commodities have never been a reliable store of value over time, but they are sufficiently fungible across borders to be influenced by the purchasing power of the monetary unit in which they are de-nominated, relative to other currencies. While this alone cannot explain commodity price movements, it does make the present situation a little less baffling.

They Built Their Bridge, But Where Does It Lead?

By Kyle Jarrard

P ARIS — It began several years ago. on the members of her family, driving wedges, weakening their resolve. There were great outbursts of anger. she looked dead. She lay in a fetal position, her hair sweaty, her skin almost transincent. Her eyes were half-open but saw nothing. A rubber strap, two necdles and wads of bloodstained cotton were scattered on the floor.

The small, shuttered room was unbearably hot. Her mother stood in a corner, staring, arms slack, whispering that she had not known what to do.

The brother-in-law could feel no pulse but when he put his ear to her chest he heard her heart beating. He asked how long she had been like this. An hour. It was not the first time she had gone so near the edge, but something told him that this time her life was at stake.

He didn't know what to do. (We never seem to do exactly the right things at times like this.) He began to talk to her loudly ("Wake up, wake up!"), shook her head, shouted her name. He felt as if he were yelling uselessly across a great chasm between the living and the dead, unable to call her back. But he yelled, his wife yelled. Her mother yelled. Nothing. In a quarter-hour the emergency team arrived: half a dozen young firemen and a doctor who quickly gave her shots, took her pulse, yelled at her, slapped her. She seemed to come to, only to fade. They took her down the stairs on a er to an ambulance.

It had been three years since she began trying heroin, and the intervals between doses had grown shorter. Unemployed for months, she had been spending her days sleeping, her nights on the square with dealers — thin, pale men she called her friends. She was 25 years old and eighed about 40 kilos (90 pounds). In three days she was home again. It was as if it hadn't happened at all.

For weeks, as she recovered, her family made sure that someone was always with her. A psychiatrist, whom they could not afford, came twice a week. Gradually she regained her appetite, talked openly with everyone about her life, went and came without incident. A feeling of normalcy grew. But it didn't take hold.

In the five years after that night she went through many highs and lows, some horrific, others transitory. After a while she refused to see the psychiatrist, Then she began to focus her bitterness and fear wedges, weakening their resolve. There

At times it was like war. They locked the door to the apartment so she could not go out when they were not home, shadowed her in the streets, confronted her when she sought out her suppliers.

It was a hard, depressing task to keep up with her. She would find ways to get drugs no matter what they did. One by one they gave up, telling themselves that there was nothing to be done, that if an adult, now approaching 30, did not want to change, perhaps could not change, then they were not responsible.

Her family became irrational, one night even talking about pushing her out on the streets, believing that the shock of being on her own, with no job, no place to sleep, no food, would bring her around. Yet they held back — this was flesh and blood. Deep down, they felt that they might make the difference between her and others like her who are totally alone and never recover. Their tenacity, they hoped, could hold back the tide in which so many drift and drown.

How many times they thought they would never see the end of it. How often they imagined her dying of an overdose.

Months passed during which she swing between extremes. Many nights she would come home glassy-eyed, listless, refuse to eat, and fall into bed. But then, more days went well. She began to tend to herself, her person, come to her family with discoveries — a new friend, a job offer. They encouraged her, waited and hoped for the best, wary that the cycle of downfall and recovery could start again. It did not, at least not as dramatically as before.

The rest of the work was hers. She found a job that she liked, her own apartment and better company. All that gave her back some self-respect, a respect for others. She rebuilt her life.

Everyone was proud. Many open wounds came to be healed. No one looked back, nor too far ahead, living each day as it came. It was over.

Then one day not long ago she arrived very late at the door. She had an odd look on her face, and they asked about it. The question seemed to shatter her and tears poured down her face. She had tested positive for the AIDS virus. For a long time no one could speak, She was very tired. She spoke slowly, mostly of her job, saying she would hold on to that, would keep busy. Something was blocking fear. She said that she had her family, her friends, and that these counted most. When she left, she appeared to be as strong - and as helpless as they had ever seen her. Suddenly the work of years seemed like a bridge built to nowhere. Now the family waits. She waits. They suppose they know what is nearing out of the dark.

nine people. ETA-claimed actions in the last week have included a car bombing of a national police van in central San Sebastian on Sunday that killed an officer and seriously injured four others and two car bombings in towns near the city of Bilbao on Friday that seriously in-

Computer Use by Students Questioned CAMBRIDGE, Massachusetts (AP) — The expanding American fascination with personal computers is weakening the fundamental understanding of science among the young, according to Philip Morrison, a professor of physics at Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

He said that American science students show great literacy in computers, but they have gained that ability at the expense of more basic scientific studies. Instead of experimenting with radio, or optics, or other science gadgets that fascinated earlier generations, Dr. Morrison said, the young now concentrate on mastering computer skills.

Dr. Morrison, 71, who was a member of the Manhattan Project team that developed the atomic bomb, said computer literacy has narrowed the feens of scientific curiosity among students, causing a loss of what he called the three-dimension view. "It's all two-dimensional now," he said. "Science education is slowly weakening. I'm worned about that."

Polio Recurrence Puzzles Researchers WARM SPRINGS, Georgia (UPI) - The mystery of why thousands of ex-polio patients are experiencing a recurrence of their symptoms 30 years after the epidemics of the 1950s remains unsolved, but there is new knowledge about the syndrome. The knowledge is mostly about what the syndrome is not, rather than what it may be, although the very exercise prescribed to keep polio victims active is believed to be a contributor. Also, there is no agreement on what symptoms constitute the "late effects" of poin, said Dr. Paul F. Peach, medical director of the Roosevelt Warm Springs Institute for Dr. Peach said people who believe they may be experiencing the late effects of polio should avoid stressful activities that may be causing the symptoms, avoid high repetition-high resistance exercises, pay more tention to their lifestyle, learn to better manage stress and get a medical In treating people suffering from renewed polio symptoms, Dr. Peach said, "both the person and his or her lifestyle must be closely evaluated in determining the factors that are causing new fatigue, muscle and joint pain and other problems. Very often, though, these symptoms can be controlled by appropriate lifestyle modifications."

The Effect of Estrogen on Bone Cells

ROCHESTER: Minnesota (NYT) — Bone cells are more like cells that line the uterus than any other cells of the body, scientists at the Mayo Clinic have discovered. The finding helps explain why the female sex hormone extrogen seems to protect women from osteoporous, the bone-deteriorating disease.

Scientists have known that bone loss accelerates after menopause and that estrogen replacement therapy can slow this loss and prevent or delay the onset of osteoporosis. For that reason, researchers proposed that bone cells must respond directly to estrogen. But, until now, there has been no

Dr. B. Lawrence Riggs and Dr. Thomas Spelsberg have reported finding that estrogen acts directly on bone and that bone cells are as responsive to estrogen as cells that line the uterus. Dr. Riggs speculated that women who benefit most from estrogen replacement therapy may have bone cells that are less sensitive to the hormone's effects and so would require more estrogen to grow normally. If so, it may be possible to identify these women and restrict estrogen therapy to them.

By James Gleick New York Times Service OS ALAMOS, New Mexico -No longer content with dissecting tissues, analyzing proteins and breeding fruit flies, an increasingly diverse group of scientists has decided that the best way to study life is to make some of their own. They are creating a field called artificial life, mixing the impulses of biology with the tools of computation. By looking beyond the usual materials of life — beyond the fa-miliar biochemistry of earthly animals and plants — they hope to capture its spirit: the animated, the energetic, the replicating, the evolved.

Most of the would-be organisms of artificial life exist solely in the electronic environment of the comuter, where they have little danger of being confused with the real thing. The first conference on artificial life, held last week at the Los Alamos National Laboratory, offered models of processes from protein formation to plant growth to animal predation - processes meant to be, if not life, then at least

The simulations of biology address some of the most troubling questions of the life sciences; how the primitive precursors of DNA gained the ability to store information and copy it; how the senseless force of natural selection created structures of such extraordinary complexity and beauty; how the laws of ecosystems arise from the whims of individual animals.

They also reflect an expanding ense within science of what life is. Artificial life seeks "the ghost in the machine," as the conference orga-nizer, Christopher Langton of Los Alamos, put it -- an essence arising out of matter but independent of it.

"It lies in the complexity of orga-nization," said Richard Dawkins, an evolutionary biologist at Oxford University. It's not a substance; there's no living material. It's just an incidental fact that in real living things the entities that happen to be organized happen to be made of organic, soft, squishy stuff, whereas in a computer they're made of hard, non-moving chips.".

The creatures of artificial life already make up a strange menager-Walt Disney. Invisible bugs breed and die out as they leave trails through a mound of electronic figure shapes evolve in a few dozen perations into startling butter-quality of living things, preferably quality that arises not from the igner's intent but from unplanned processes.

"What keeps me awake at night is not correspondence to reality," said Steen Rasmussen of the Technical University of Denmark. "I want to know what is the soul in this that creates order - what is the engine."

Stripped of bone and sinew, leaf and petal, ribosome and chromosome, life still has a logic that can be abstracted in a computer that, at any rate, is the belief driving the new discipline. Nor is the computer essential. Some scientists are trying to create microscopic carriers of information in fragmentary protein strands or pieces of clay crystal.

"Surely there must be a more general sort of biology," said Gra-ham Cairns-Smith of the University of Glasgow, author of "Seven Clues to the Origin of Life." "This is the aeroplanes-don't-have-feathers principle. Yes, birds have feathers and fly beautifully, but we have different requirements."

In general, by creating a variety of computer environments, universes with their own sets of rules, scientists intend to provide ways of thinking about universal principles of life — principles more general, perhaps, than those observed in nature. Computer scientists since John von Neumann, one of the fathers of the computer in the 1940s and '50s have known that such artificial environments can create 'self-replicating automata," organized structures that reproduce

The Dow Jones industrial average, which fell 10.08 points Tuesday, rose near the end of the day to close at 2.596.28, a gain of 5.71 points.

Advances led losers by 7 to 6, on volume of 177.6 million shares, up slightly from Tuesday's million.

Traders said that buying by portfolio managers, who want to close their books at the end of the quarter showing stecks that have appreciated, had lent support to prices.

INTERNATIONAL MANAGER

U.K. Executive Salary Gap Seems to Be Diminishing

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

HY ARE British managers comparatively under-paid? In a survey just published by Employment Conditions Abroad, in London, which compares salaries in 18 countries, British managers are less well paid than the Swiss, the West Germans and the French. Only South African and Greek managers earn less money.

British chief executive officers, in particular, do not fare much better than their employees. According to a survey of chief executives' salaries in 20 countries published last June by Towers Perrin, an international management consulting firm in London, "Worldwide Total Remuneration Survey," British chief executives ranked 13th in terms of gross salary (cash only). They were and Greek managers ries, British chief executives earn less money ranked 15th. And taking into than British ones. account purchasing power in different countries. British chief executives were less well off than American, Brazilian, Argentine and French and German chief executives, but just a bit better off than Japanese chief

"Low British salaries are an inheritance from the days of high taxation which discouraged cash payments and encouraged fringe benefits," said Nigel Dyckhoff, senior director at Spencer Susari in London, an international executive search firm Tax rates, who at one time were as high as 98 percent, made an increase in salary not particularly attractive. There was also the fact that business wasn't quite the thing to go into, so it was

Although it is difficult to say whether high taxes discouraged people's interest in making money or whether their disinterest in making money meant they did not mind high taxes, some contend that British managers usually did not push for higher salaries.

"You could almost call it a cultural difference," said Graham Lindsay, a consultant for Korn/Ferry International, another executive search firm. "Traditionally the British have not been that money oriented. There was an attitude that there are other things in tife besides money like going for walks in the country, patting the dog on the head and dropping in at the local pub."

TTRACTIVE mortgage terms and rates (the possibility of .90 to 100 percent mortgage financing for as much as three times the salary for first time buyers) and a bull property market for the past 20 years in London and the south of the country have also been a factor by supplementing the salaries of those buying a house or an apartment.

But, although British managers still do not earn as much as many of their counterparts around the world, some are catching up with the salaries of their European colleagues.

In the past year, senior British managers did particularly well from stock option plans that were first encouraged by favorable tax treatment of such plans introduced in 1984.

"It is becoming a myth that British salaries are lower," said Keith Exall, British market director for Towers Perrin. "The main difference between British and French and German salaries are executive stock plans." According to a Towers Perrin survey of 50 large British companies released in September, all 50 had stock option plans in 1987, compared with 10 percent in 1979. When such long-term incentives as stock options are included, British chief executives earned more than French, Belgian and Dutch chief executives, but less than American, German and Swiss chief executives, according to Towers Perrin.

A typical British chief executive at a large company, for instance; whose cash pay was £190,000 ($304,000) last year, received a £20,000 bonus and £150,000 in stock options.

Mr. Yoshida's sentiment is typical of the consumer reaction to DAT, as the technology introduced seven months ago is known. So far, DAT is available only in Japan, and few Japanese are buying the machines. But many experts still portray DAT as a revolutionary medium that eventually will supplant cassette

Because DAT machines record music digitally, like a compact disk, the music from them is crystal clear, without a hint of a hiss. They also have another advantage over analog tape machines: The tapes they play are even smaller than cassettes, yet can hold two hours of music.

The high price and the lack of prerecorded tapes seem the principal reasons why the machines are not selling well in Japan. The

Electronic Industries Associa-

Analysts said the string of gains in the index was pointing the way to continued moderate economic growth for the rest of this year and through the 1988 presidential elec-tion, something bound to cheer Reablicans hoping to hold onto the

The index last declined in January. The seven monthly gains are the longest stretch of consecutive increases since a string of 21 straight advances that started in September 1982, just before the be-ginning of the current recovery.

The recovery from the 1981-82 recession will be 59 months long next month, making it the longest U.S. peacetime expansion.

The index is composed of 11 for-six to nine months in the future.

The biggest positive force in Au-gust was a big gain in stock market prices, which pushed the Standard & Poor's 500-stock index up 6.2 percent in August.

Four of the statistics were positive forces on the index. The other strength came from a drop in weekby unemployment claims, a rise in building permits and an increase in the U.S. money supply.

LONDON — Cocoa prices fell Wednesday to a four and three-quarter year low in London after a British trade house forecast a 1987/88 world surplus of almost 129,000 tous (116,000 metric tons), traders said.

Prices for December delivery touched a low of £1,179 ($1,922) a long ton from £1,215 Tuesday, At the beginning of 1987, cocoa was trading at more than £1,400 a long ton.

The trade house, Gill and Duffus, in its latest report on the cocoa market, also revised its estimate of the 1986/87 surplus upward to 90,000 tons from about $3,800 tons.

Many traders said they felt the Gill and Duffus surplus estimates were too high, and that an overproduction of between 60,000 and 72,000 tons would be more realistic for the 12-month season that begins Thursday, That still would make it the fourth consecutive year of surplus.

Surplus.

The traders said they considered the Gill and Dulfus production forecasts for the Ivory Coast, Brazil and Nigeria to be substantially

Dollar Rises on Month-End Buying

LONDON — The U.S. dollar edged higher Wednesday in Eutope, as market participants bought the U.S. currency to square their books at the end of the month and the quarter, dealers said. But traders said there was little impact from a proposal by the U.S. Treasury Secretary, James A. Baker 3d. for linking currencies to a basket of commodities, including gold.

In London, the dollar closed higher at 1.8430 Deutsche marks after 1.8400 on Tuesday, at 146.40 ven, from 146,15; at 1.5325 Swiss francs after 1.5290 and at 6.1344 French francs from 6.1175.

The British pound also slipped to $1.6255 from $1.6280.

The dollar's rise exerted upward pressure on sterling against the mark, and toward the end of the trading session the pound came close to the 3 DM level that the Bank of England has been resisting in the past few months.

The pound closed at 2,9945 DM from 2.9960 at Tuesday's close.

Sterling's movements against out its losses against the dollar, and the pound ended unchanged from the opening and the previous close at 73.1 on its trade-weighted index.

A proposal from the British chancellor of the Exchequer, Nigel Lawson, for a more managed sys-tem of floating exchange rates also failed to stir the market from its lethargy. Mr. Lawson, like Mr. Baker speaking at the annual meet-ing of the International Monetary Fund, urged maximum exchange rate stability and explicit currency

Economists tended to shrug off the two proposals. "In my view, these comments are simed at papering over cracks" among the members of the leading industrialized countries on their economic policies, said Ian Harwood, an economist at S.G. Warburg.

Mr. Baker's proposal for a currency-commodity link was also seen by Mr. Chertkow as 8 "smokescreen to cover up basic disagreements between Western authorities" over their economic policies. "The Fed looks at sensitive prices every month," he said of the U.S. central bank. "So what is new in this initiative?" In New York at midday, howev-

The dollar rose to 1.8468 DM from Tuesday's close at 1.8415, and to 146.65 yen from 146.55.

Dan Holland, of Discount Corp., said Mr. Baker's proposal helped steady the dollar in large part because "people don't know what to make of it." While it underscored a view that officials are prepared to support the dollar, he said, most people think if it were implemented it would be a long way down the road, due to the complexity of setting it up. In earlier European trading, the dollar was fixed lower at 1.8417 DM from 1.8383 on Tuesday, and in Paris at 6.1180 French francs

Bank of France Blunts Rise Of Franc on Mark, Dollar

PARIS — The Bank of France intervened in currency markets Wednesday to stem the French franc's rise on market expectations of higher French interest rates, dealers said, mainly by buying small amounts of dollars and Deutsche marks.

The central bank declined to comment on its reported action. The French currency was nonetheless fixed higher in Paris, at 6.1180 francs to the dollar, from Tuesday's fixing at 6.1317, and at 332.87 francs for every 100 DM, np from 333.

Dealers said news on Tuesday that German inflation in September was lower than expected depressed the mark against the franc, because it meant that French interest rates might need to rise to meet the Prench government's goal to limit prices rises. Funds are often attracted to assets offering higher interest rates.

The German cost of living fell a provisional 0.2 percent from August, and stood 0.5 percent higher than in September last year.

The French government is aiming to limit French inflation to 8 maximum of 2 percentage points above that of West Germany by the end of the year. French prices were rising at 2.4 percent for the first seven months, but the rate is expected to top 3 percent by year-end.

Dealers also said the West German currency was weakening against the franc because of the dollar's strength against the mark. They said the central bank also bought small amounts of marks on Tuesday.

DAT: Buyers Reluctant Over High Prices of Recorder were sold in the year after they were introduced, and fewer than 20,000 video cassette recorders were sold in their first year.

The most controversial feature of DAT machines is their ability to record. That ability terrifies recording companies, which fear that DAT machines will hurt their sales. Even the manufacturers of DAT machines see this as a cause for concern: They are the same companies that make compact disk players, and they worry that aggressive marketing of DAT machines will cut into the compact disk player

As a concession to the recording industry, DAT manufacturers have built the machines so that consum ers cannot make direct digital-todigital copies of compact disks. But the machines still can make conventional analog copies of compact disks, copies that are virtually as good as the onginals.

Alan P. Bell, an electronics analyst at Salomon Brothers Inc. in Tokyo, said that manufacturers were keeping prices artificially high and were rejuctant to be seen as promoting DAT for fear of being sued by recording companies.

"It's a game of Russian roulene," Mr. Bell said. "Nobody wants to be first."

Even with these initial problems, there have been indications in the last few weeks that DAT machines are gaining — and will continue to do so. Sony Corp. announced that it would begin exporting the machines to Europe next month, initially to West Germany, Sony also has decided to introduce a professional version of its DAT recorder, priced at $5,000 or more, in the United States next month.

Sony and Matsushita Electrical Industrial Co. also have announced that they soon will begin to market portable DAT players in Japan. And a few weeks ago Sony introduced a high-speed duplication of DAT machines remains the bigsystem for andio companies that gest stumbling block. U.S. music want to record digital audio tapes. companies want DAT machines

(Continued from first finance page) Until now purchasers of DAT players have had no prerecorded music to play on their machines, but that could change rapidly. While compact disks are difficult and expensive to make, digital audio tapes can be churned out relatively easily. The first music recorded on the tapes is now on sale, with some 17 titles available in West

There are signs that the impetus is building to make DAT more widely available," said Akiko Emori, an electronics analysi at Jardine Fleming Securities in Tokyo. Mr. Emori said that while equipped with a "spoiler chip" that would prevent them from recording compact disks, but the manufacturers complain - and some music critics agree - that the spoiler chip system would have a slight but noticeable effect on the quality

Audio buffs, already disgrantled at not being able to make digital copies of compact disks, also point to a few other disadvantages. Like cassettes but unlike compact disks. digital audio tapes wear out with use. And although DAT machines bave a fast-forward that is 200 times faster than the play speed

Nobuo Kanoi, senior managing, director of Sony, said that a sales network for DAT recorders was being set up in West Germany and later would be expanded in Europe. If disputes with recording companies could be settled, he said, DAT machines aimed at the mass market should be available in the United States next year.

Mr. Kanoi also said that the price was likely to drop substantially as production increased. Some analysts said that the price should drop below $350.

Pöhl Criticizes U.S. on Loan Funding for Poorest

WASHINGTON - Karl Otto Pohl, chairman of the West German Bundesbank, criti-rized the United States on Wednesday for resisting a proposed increase in a loan fund to aid the world's most impoverished nations. Mr. Pohl, addressing the annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank, said that all member countries should raise their contributions to the fund, and added.

"We are willing to do so." The U.S. Treasury secretary, James A. Baker 3d. has said that nations with large trade surhuses, such as Japan and West Germany, should pay for a proposed tripling of the special

$3 billion loan fund administered by the IMF. But most U.S. allies support a plan advanced by the IMF managing director, Michel Camdessus, that would spread the costs among the industrialized nations. He has noted that the seven nations represented at the Venice economic summit meeting in June vowed to Paul Chertkow, director of eco- increase the fund.

Mr. Pohl also disputed President Ronald Reagan's contention Tuesday that West Germany and Japan needed to do more to stimulate their economies to help ease trade imbal-

Budgetary adjustments in Japan, and the already enacted tax reductions in the Federal Republic of Germany, will give additional im-petus to the continued expansion of domestically led growth in these countries," Mr. Pohl

While conceding that West German growth had been slow in 1986 and early this year, Mr. Pohl asserted that "the German economy is again back on a satisfactory path of growth, with in ternal demand expanding at a healthy 3 to 3.5 percent" annual rate.

President Reagan told delegates here Tuesday that Japan and West Germany, which have the two largest trade surpluses with the United States, should "find the political gumption" to take a larger role in easing trade imbalances. It must be recognized that the health of the world economy does not hinge solely on U.S. budget policy," he said.

The president cited his signing of legislation to force $23 billion in reductions of the U.S. dget deficit, and said that Japan and West Germany had a responsibility to take equally tough steps to stimulate growth in their econo-

ST. JOHN DE CRÈVECOEUR: The Life of an American Farmer By Gay Wilson Allen and Roger Asselineau. Illustrated. 266 pages. $19.95. Viking Inc., 40 West 23d Street, New York, N. Y. 10010.

MICHEL GUILLAUME St. Jean De Crèvecoeur won fame in his own day as the author of "Letters From an American Farmer" (1782) and the book has retained the status of a minor classic ever since. Its interest lies partly in its realistic glimpses of rural life, partly in its romantic and Rousseanistic attitude toward nature as a whole. At the same time, it is unlikely that it would be regarded as quite as much of a milestone as it is if, in the course of it, Crevecoeur had not also asked a course of it, Crèvecoeur had not also asked a question that, according to his latest biographers, he was probably the first to pose so directly: "What is an American?"

His reply, briefly, was that Americans were a new race, sprung from a mixture of European stocks but less subject to class divisions than Europeans, animated by a spirit of independence that left individuals free to enjoy the fruits of their labor, characterized by "industry, good living, selfishness, litigiousness, try, good living, selfishness, litigicusness, country politics, the pride of a freeman, religious indifference." His specific observations, however, were less arresting than his general assertion of newness: "The American is a new man who acts upon new principles; he must therefore entertain new ideas and form new

If "Letters From an American Farmer" is still regularly cited in the history books, Crevesan regularly cased in the instory books, Creve-coent remains a shadowy figure to all but specialists. A new biography was overdue, and in most respects Gay Wilson Allen and Roger Asselinean's "St. John de Crevecoent" fills the bill admirably. Allen is a former professor of English at New York University; Asselinean is director of American studies at the Contents director of American studies at the Sorbonne.

Crèvecoeur was bom in Normandy, where his family, members of the minor nobility, had been established for centuries. He emerged from a Jesuit school firmly committed to the ideals of the Enlightenment; a prolonged stay in England turned him into an Anglophile: what seem to have been strained relations with his father led him to enlist in the French army in Canada, where he distinguished himself as a mapmaker, surveying the region of the St. Lawrence River with the help of Indian mides, and served under Montealm against the British and served under Montealm against the British during the siege of Quebec.

In 1759, after Quebec had fallen, he made his way to New York, for reasons he never explained (although his knowledge of English and his admiration for English institutions no doubt played their part). He spent much of the following decade supporting himself as a surveyor — one expedition took him as far afield as St. Louis: but in 1769 he married the daughas St. Louis; but in 1769 he married the daugh-ter of a land-owning family from Westchester County in New York and began farming in County in New York and began farming in Orange County, New York.

During the War of Independence, he suffered many hardships, first at the hands of patriot neighbors (his sympathies were loyalist), and then, inonically, at the hands of the British, after he had taken refuge in New York City and been thrown into jail on the basis of an anonymous denunciation. It was in England, even so, that he found a publisher for the "Letters From an American Farmer," during his stay there on his journey back to France in 1780-81.

It is significant, and odd, that the authors make no mention of what must surely be the most challenging account of Crevecoeur ever written, the chapter about him in D.H. Law-rence's "Studies in Classic American Litera-

Lawrence regarded Crèvecoeur as the emotional prototype of the American, as opposed to Benjamin Franklin, the practical prototype. In spite of his jeering tone, he does force you to think hard about Crevecoeur's impulse to idealize nature; and for all his criticisms he brings home how brilliantly Crevecocur could write at his best (in his marvelous account of a hum-mingbird, for example) as Allen and Asselinezo never do.

The authors' real forte is straightforward biography, and the second half of the story proves as interesting as the first. With the success of the "Letters," and even more after he had translated them into French, Crèvecoeur became a well-known figure in Parisian society, a kind of minor philosophe. He returned to New York to serve as French consul (which meant giving up his American citizen-ship) in 1783; went back to France in 1789; endured frequent auxieties during the Revolutionary period; rusticated in the provinces; spent a rewarding spell in Munich when his son-in-law, Count Otto, was appointed Napoleon's ambassador to Bavaria. In the end, for all the pull of the New World, both Crevecceur and his children remained French. But it is his American aspects that make him worth writing about today - and not just the "Letters From an American Farmer," but his extended role as a cultural go-between, which Allen and Asselineau have chronicled in absorbing detail.

"Can your workers change companies? That would be free ncy, and we don't believe in that. Once they sign with a franchise, they belong to the franchise for life. . . . Are you kidding? You say no worker will agree to a lifetime contract with one company, it's not the American way? What are you, an employment agency or a den of anarchists?

"Well, if you won't supply any workers, we're going to play rough. We're going to recruit members of the Hell's Angels.

"What's that? Every man in America with a tattoo, a motorcycle and a black leather jacket has moved to Irwindale, California, to work for Al Davis? I'm going to call my lawyer. That's a monopoly. This is America. We've not labor laws against things like that."

For 'Human Anchor,' Life Can Be a Real Downer

By Andrew W. Beyer

Washington Fost Service
WASHINGTON — Carlos Meyer quit his job as manager of a restaurant in Alexandria, Virginiz, so he could spend the entire racing season in Saratoga Springs, New York, and make his fortune. At the time, that did not appear to be a wholly rational decision. Meyer's bankroll was a measer $1,300 (of which at least half would be needed to pay his bar bill at the Cate Broadway in Saratoga Springs). Although Meyer would have access to the opinions of some ace gamblers, his own handicapping and betting tend to be erratic at best. Moreover, Meyer is not a lucky guy. His friends have dubbed him "the human anchor," and fate never has shown an inclination to let him win a fortune and retire to a life of houry.

But Meyer would not be deterred. When the Saratoga season ended last month and most of his friends were toting up their mod-est profits, Meyer could claim credit for a gambling windfall of $656,592 - for someone else, of course. In the early stages of the meeting, Meyer seemed to be living up to his reputation for incklessness. He made a plunge on a horse named Wind Chill, who led all the way to win by four lengths (and would have doubled Meyer's bankroll), only to be disqualified for an infraction leaving the gate.

On a day when some of Meyer's friends to capitalize, following a monumental vodkadrinking performance the previous night.

With a week left in the season and his bankroll near oblivion, Meyer was inconsol-able. He had earlier invited a friend, Janice, to join him for the final weekend, but on Friday he called her and canceled the invitation. It turned out to be a memorable broken date. On Saturday, instead of flying north for a day at Saratoga, Janice spent a normal day in Annapolis, Maryland. She went to the bank in the morning; she made a stop at Manhat-tan Liquors, where she bought one ticket in the Maryland lottery; she went to work; she went to a party in the evening. It was not until the next morning she learned that she had won the lottery, that Meyer's canceled invitation had been worth $656,592.15. Meyer learned of Janice's windfall when he returned home from Saratoga Springs virtually broke. Some of his friends argued that she should feel morally obliged to cut Meyer in for 10 percent of the winnings. After all, she wouldn't have won the lottery if Meyer hadn't been such a cad. But Meyer is too much of a gentleman to make such a suggestion and, besides, he had an altogether different reaction. "I thought," he said, "that it was a sign my own luck was about to change."

He wasn't the Anchor any more. So when Meyer got a phone call a few days made their big score by pounding a $74 exacta later from his friend Paul Comman, he fig-in the first race. Meyer was too fuzzy-headed nred it was all a part of fate's master plan for him. Comman is a horse owner who is one of New York's best bettors, and he suggested that Meyer come to Belmont Park to bet 2 terrific 30-to-1 shot in the feature race. Meyer went, made a big bet, and watched the long shot finish next to last. With his remaining few dollars be wanted to take a last desperation stab in the ninth race, a race in which one of Cornman's horses, Beaujolight, was entered "Should I bet him?" Meyer asked.

"No," Comman said.

Meyer boxed three horses in the triple, and watched them run second, third and fourth behind Beaujolight, who paid $77.40 to win. Meyer took a long train ride back to Washington, arrived at 1 A.M. and found a $35 ticket on his car because of its expired registration. He was so eager to get home and end the awful day that he was driving 73 mph (118 kph) in a 40-mph zone when he was stopped by a police officer. Meyer made a suggestion about what the officer could do with the speeding ticket; the officer suggested Meyer accompany him to the police station.

After he was released, Meyer's 1979 Mustang remained impounded. Fortunately, Janice was kind enough to drive him to Pimlico Race Course in her snazzy new white Toyota convertible. Unfortunately, Meyer's luck hasn't changed at Pimlico, either.

The V & A's 'Cultural Economist'

By Francis X. Clines

New York Times Service T ONDON - Sir Roy Strong, the pithy Englishman who made the mammoth Victoria and Albert Museum prance stylishly into the modern era of the "leisure industry," is quitting as director, exhausted by his own forced evolution from Renaissance scholar to money-hungry "cultural economist."

"Dog-eat-dog: It's not all honey as it used to be," Sir Roy said of the heated competition for money among the world's museum directors. "It was just our historical bitchery in the past, but now it's on a megaplane, with all of us fighting each other in Tokyo trying to get our hands on the loot from the different Japanese companies. Pretty low down."

The departing director is the first to admit these are sharp words from a 52-year-old scholar who entered the museum field in quiet distant days on the strength of a thesis on Elizabethan court pageantry as propagan-

"Not exactly ideal grounding for running this place of 700 staff, five unions and uncounted millions to be sought in fund raising," he said.

But here he is, or, rather, there he goes, heading at year's end for a career as art commentator, in print and on television, and renewed scholarship. With a stare as wide as his thick brush mustache, Sir Roy has been forced to discover he is part actor manqué, scrambling administrator, bash-throwing bon vivant, man about culture, amateu mathematician and ultimate survivor -- just what it takes to run a modern museum, by his accounting. He is convinced his time has been well spent in dealing with the enormous changes in museum management, but wor-ried, too, lest classic scholarship itself becomes a curiosity in modern museums as they try to adapt attractively to the public's grow

Sir Roy promises to be happy in his exit, in part because he managed to write a sizable shelf full of books of curatorial scholarship and two on his obsession with gardening — even as he was begging daily for money.
Even more, he leaves happily because in November the museum will have the renewed economic strength to reopen on Fridays after a 10-year budget-saving hiatus on that day

"Tears streamed down my face," Sir Roy said in recalling the moment a decade ago when the proud, sprawling museum, a privi-leged brick and terra cotta flagship since the days of Victoria herself, was forced to so retreat from its public. He is proud at leaving a full six-and-a-half-day work week to his successor, Elizabeth Esteve-Coll, chosen in a wide ranging talent search but found, like so much else in England, within the walls of the "V & A," where she is chairman of the National Art Library.

A visitor can tell you it is not easy for

nyone, tourist or director, to leave the Victoria and Albert, a wedding cake of a building whose seven miles of galleries house the nation's most eclectically chocked treasure trove, from early medieval candlesticks to Madame de Serilly's boudoir, from George III's harpsichord to the Carnaby Street miniskirts of Swinging London's recent memory.

Among other things, Sir Roy ended the Competition for museum funds 'was just our historical bitchery in the past, but now it's on a megaplane with all of us fighting each other in Tokyo trying to get our hands on the loot from Japanese companies.'

eum's policy of not peeking much beyoud Victorians and it has raced forward into modern acquisitions - and back, too, with shows rated memorable by critics, such as a vivid evocation of the Mogul empire, and the ambitious scholarly displays that made such a recent worldwide vogue of the English

"I think I shall be labeled Britain's first Thatcherite museum director," Sir Roy said in looking back on 14 years of draconian budget cuts that predated Margaret Thatcher's arrival as prime minister. He nevertheless is credited with leading the museum to new heights of creativity, in part by understanding how the public's changing appetites could be whetted by treating the museum's enor-mous stores as the stuff of modern style

The Thatcherite label is something I welcome because the museum world has always tended to drift, and these hard years have given it a sense of focus." added the administrator, who felt the lash of both Laborite and Tory budgeteers.

Typically contrary to the end, Sir Roy is emphatic in his view that, for all the pain, the new, richer middle class must pay more for their museum pleasures and demand a better show in return from complacent curators. For his part, Sir Roy is rated a genius at battling complacency, and to those art histo-rians who rate him a mere populist, he smiled, pointed to his shelf of books and said, "I've been able to do both."

He has used the lean years to revamp the museum's administration, funding and curatorial operations so it finally has a government-free board of trustees, is tapping "plu-ral funding" from corporations invited to use the premises for posh parties, and is opening satellite museums in such innovative fields as childhood toys and memorabilia.

The museum is moving toward Sir Roy's goal of using the nation's most comprehen-sive store of historic home furnishings, wallpapers and architectural lore to enter the nterior decorating business in England's booming regentrification iodustry.

"We've been exploited for years, never got a bean as these designs were copied," he said, envisioning a chain of boutiques helping to scholarship.

This line between the crass and the scholarly must be mastered as an art itself by museum directors, he stresses, apologizing not at all for his success at this, both at the V & A and in his earlier, highly praised reformation of the National Portrait Gallery. "I was the product of a family with a father left in 1939 with only £5 a week, and I had to win every scholarship in the book," Sir Roy said when asked about Britain's economic and cultural divide, in which London and the South are on a high-style binge fed in part by the V & A, thanks to his efforts. "It was not funny being a havenot, but we must recogn that the majority of people who use these collections are the haves."

All the more reason, he says, to charge them at the door, which the museum does now on a voluntary basis.

"They've got disposable income," said the hard-pressed museum director, refraining from rubbing his hands together as he near the day when he can leave the Victoria and Albert behind.

A Michael Bennett Line

Broadway paid tribute Tuesday to Michael Bennett, the man be-hind "A Chorus Line." the longestrunning show in Broadway history. In an emotional 90-minute salute, family and friends, particularly people who worked with Bennett during his 27-year theater career, celebrated the director and choreographer who died July 2 of AIDSrelated lymphoma. "He knew how to put a show together," said Joseph Papp, whose New York Shakespeare Festival hankrolled is still making money from it. He owned by the Saudi financier Adwas no such thing as wasted time. I reported. Trump is buying the 286-think that's a marvelous lesson for foot yacht from the Sukra of Bruall of us today." The memorial was nei, according to the Post. The held at the Shubert Theater, where yacht, named for Khashoggi's "A Chorus Line," the story of and is still playing.

The Polish climber Jerzy Kuknowka became the second person to scale the world's 14 highest mountains after coaquering Mount Xixabangma in China, the official Polish news agency reported. The 14 mountains, all in the Himalaya and Karakoram ranges, have peaks that rise more than 8,000 meters (26,000 feet) above sea level. The news agency said Kukuczka scaled October, 16 years to climb all 14.

Dolly Parton says she was able to give up cheeseburgers and nachos and ultimately trim 50 pounds from her 5-foot-2 figure because she had "the will to live and the will to be happy." "It got to the point where it was either 'do or die," she told Family Circle magazine. "I decided that I was either going to live and be happy or kill myself." The singer said she invented ber own diet. "I gave myself 'permission' to eat whatever I wanted, but in very small portions." She also fasted once a week and cut out binge eating.

In Washington Judge Robert Richter dismissed a $2 million libel suit against the Gannett Co. Chairman Ailen Neuharth that was in her suit that she suffered emotional distress when Neuharth de med he was her father. Neuharth the founder of USA Today, has been through a series of legal bartles with Neuharth-Moore and her mother Betty Moore. Last year, a paternity suit brought against him paterinty suit the against him was dismissed because Neuharth. Moore had passed the age of 21.

The real estate magnate Donald Trump has agreed to pay $25 mil-"A Chorus Line" 12 years ago and lion to $30 million for a yacht once made every moment work. There non Khashogg, the New York Post daughter Nabila, features a disco, a dancers auditioning for a Broad-swimming pool surrounded by bulway musical, opened in July 1975 let-proof glass, art works and a marrored grand piano that was a gift from Liberace, the Post said. However, a Trump spokesman said no contract had been signed.

The Players Club, a men's organization founded 99 years ago in. New York so that actors could rub elbows with practitioners of the finer arts, has voted to admit women. "I don't believe anyone will resign as a result." Roger Bryant the first of the 14 in 1979. It took Hunting, the club's secretary, said the Italian climber Reinhald Tuesday. "It will create a slightly Messner, who set the record last different atmosphere, which I don't believe will be significant." The club counts among its members Gregory Peck, Frank Sinatra, Jack on, Raul Julia, Laurence Ofivier, Christopher Reeve, Garson Kanin and José Ferrer as president For years, Hunting said, wives and female guests have been allowed in the clubhouse, a landmark, fourstory brownstone overlooking Gramercy Park in Manhanan.
